THE CBC AND CANADA

CBC Radio has been part of the Canadian scene for over a quarter century ... CBC Television for a decade

this means for the audience: a major force uniting the nation ... source of the best of Canadian programming ... the choicest selections from outside Canada ... a balanced schedule of entertainment and information each day on CBC's Radio and Television networks (CBC broadcasts close to 200,000 radio and television programs annually).

for the artist: a national showcase for Canadian talent ... in one year alone, CBC Radio and Television paid $15 million in artists' fees.

for the advertiser: an immediate route to over 90% of the Canadian population, providing unequalled value and impact for his sales message.

total cost to you, the taxpayer, one cent a day — less, probably, than you spend on toothpaste.

Of the approximately 330 broadcasting stations serving Canada coast-to-coast, more than 85% are owned and operated by companies controlled by individual citizens.

The vast majority of audiences of all television and radio network programs broadcast in Canada are reached through these privately-owned stations. More than 85% of these stations are members of The Canadian Association of Broadcasters.

The broadcasters who devote their careers to making a success of private enterprise in broadcasting are proud that their efforts play such a vital role in informing, entertaining and educating Canadians every day of the year.
